Last night at the dinner table, my little brother kept asking questions about recycling and making paper. He always asks so many questions. Then, Dad started to talk about his work. He works for the city and one of his jobs is to tell our community about the *benefits of recycling. I thought I knew everything about recycling, but when Dad talked about his work, I got excited. ①【some / let / the information / learned / me / of / I / share】 around the dinner table.

Did you know there are ②many important benefits to making recycled paper? It takes 64% less energy to make paper from used paper than from trees. Recycling one ton of paper saves about 3 barrels of oil. This amount of oil is enough energy to heat a house for a year in many *developed countries. Also, making recycled paper takes 61% less water and results in 70% fewer *pollutants than making paper from trees. Recycling just half of the world's paper would protect 20 million *acres of forestland. Thanks to these benefits, some countries are now recycling at least half of all the paper products that are used there.

I think it is almost impossible to imagine how much paper is used every day in the world. However, there may be something we can do for the environment in our daily lives.

Then, Dad suggested making our own recycled paper. We gathered the necessary materials to make it. These are the materials we found around the house:

a *blender / a *plastic pan / warm water / a *screen frame / newspapers / *scrap paper / one large jar

This is ③the process we followed to make paper:

1. Cut scrap paper into small pieces. Place it in a jar with warm water. Let the paper *soak for half an hour.
2. Pour water into a blender until it is 1/2 full and put the soaked paper into it. Mix until it is smooth. This is called paper pulp.
3. Pour the pulp into a plastic pan and add warm water to the pan.
4. Put the screen frame into the plastic pan. When the pulp is on top of the screen, lift the screen frame out of the plastic pan.
5. Place the screen frame on some newspapers to dry.
6. After the new paper is dry, *peel it from the screen. Now you have your own recycled paper!

Well, it all started with my little brother's question around the dinner table. I understood more about the process of making recycled paper and its benefits for the environment. Also, guess what? I had an idea to use the new paper to wrap Dad's birthday present. Dad will never forget the recycled paper we made in the kitchen. Now, I wonder what my little brother will ask next at dinner.
